建议阅读时间 5分钟

Huang Yahui, a 14-year-old girl from Beijing, turned on her computer at home at 8 am. She began her first day of online classes on Feb 17.

“Each teacher took 15 minutes to show us how to study online,” Huang, who goes to Beijing No 66 Middle School, told Xinhua. “Our homework includes reviewing Chinese, mathematics and English.”

Many schools around China planned to start the new semester on Feb 17. But to control the new coronavirus outbreak (新冠病毒疫情), they put off the start of the semester. Schools in many cities, including Beijing and Guangzhou, started online classes on Feb 17, according to the Ministry of Education (教育部). Schools in Shanghai will start online classes on March 2.

Students are mainly taking classes to review what they learned last semester rather than (而不是) taking new classes, according to the ministry.

A middle school’s daily schedule can last from 7:30 am to 5 pm, with each class lasting for about 15 to 30 minutes. Self-learning, content about infection prevention (传染病预防), eye exercises and class meetings are part of the online classes, Xinhua reported.
